Housing and Social Policy – CRD 171

F – 10:00 a.m. to 1:50 p.m.
250 Olson Hall
Spring 2023

Course Objectives:

To develop an understanding of the social impact, economic dynamics, and political context of housing in the United States. Special attention will be paid to:

- (1) the effects of the housing environment on social behavior;
- (2) the dynamics of the housing market and neighborhood change; and
- (3) the changing policy context in the U.S. and alternative policy strategies at the local and national levels.

Readings:

Required readings will be drawn primarily from the course text (see below) referred to as RH and from a reader of selected articles referred to as RDR in the syllabus. RH is available for purchase new or used at: UCD store website. In the Search for Book box, type Right to Housing. It is also available from Kindle Books and other sources. RDR required readings for each class day will be posted to Canvas.

RH Bratt, Rachel G., Stone, Michael E., and Hartman, Chester, eds. 2006: A Right to Housing: Foundation for a New Social Agenda: Philadelphia: Temple University Press.

From time to time, virtual handouts will be recommended. Hyperlinks to these readings are in the syllabus and will also be posted to Canvas. Handouts are supplemental readings and resources, primarily from professional reports and news articles, that help explain and expand on the scholarly works in the readings. For enterprising students, other recommended readings are also listed in the syllabus. These readings can be useful as bibliographic materials for selecting your term paper topic and preparing your paper.

Readings are an essential part of the course and should be completed by the date listed!!!

As we transition back to in-person instruction, and relearn how to be in a classroom, there will undoubtedly be hiccups along the way. These may be the challenges of synchronous hybrid (in-person and virtual) instruction, limitations placed on guest speakers, field trips, and field research, and how to incorporate the best of in-person and remote learning based on the last two years of virtuality.

Evaluation:

Course evaluation will be based on four products:

- 1) Midterm: May 5 from 10am to 12pm, in the classroom. (30%)
- 2) Term paper: Instructions will be passed out in class. (30%)
Topics must be OK'd by the instructor: submit paragraph describing the topic by the 3rd week of class, April 21, to Vanesa Donangtavanh at donangtavanh@ucdavis.edu. Papers due: Monday, June 12, by 12:00 p.m. Submission instructions to be announced. Length: up to 18 pages, double-spaced.
- 3) Participation: Including attendance and participation in regular class meetings. (10%)
- 4) Final Examination: June 15, 10:30am to 12:30 p.m., location to be announced. (30%)

Course Outline and Syllabus

I. Definitions and Dimensions of the Problem

While housing might seem to be a self-evident necessity, there is considerable difference of opinion as to the dimensions of housing need in the U.S. Prescriptions for solutions to the “housing problem” rest closely on these differing definitions of the problem itself.

II. The Effects of the Housing Environment on Social Behavior

Architects, planners, and social scientists have long been fascinated with the potential role of housing in shaping human behavior. Our task in this section will be to systematically review representative literature on the social effects of housing, and to critically assess the theories and information presented.

III. The Housing Market

An understanding of the housing market, that is, of the process and efficiency with which people and dwellings are matched to each other, is central to the formulation of housing policy. For example, one of the most crucial of housing problems, housing shortages, occurs when the number of people seeking homes exceeds the number of available housing units. Why and how does this happen? What strategies may be applied to deal with it?

Economics have developed some of the most useful and powerful conceptual tools to help us answer these questions. They offer the notion of a market to describe the relationships between the supply, demand, and price of housing. This section examines the competitive model of the housing market, exploring its strengths and limitations as a tool for describing and analyzing the actual operation of contemporary housing markets.

IV. Housing and Public Policy

Ever since the Depression, the federal government has been a significant participant in the process of housing provision. A variety of programs have been proposed and implemented over the years. This section examines: (1) the general orientations toward public policy that underlie those programs; (2) the political arena within which housing decisions are implemented; and (3) the history of federal housing policy with an emphasis on more recent programs.
